Wonder World: A Few Things I Noticed While Not Trying

I stopped looking for signs and immediately found jokes.

The universe relaxes when you stop asking it to explain itself.

I mistook seriousness for wisdom once. It did not age well.

Wonder appears faster when you're not documenting it properly.

Some truths only show up when you're laughing at something else.

I tried to be present. I tripped over joy instead.

The world is always winking. Most days I wink back and move on.

I reached clarity and promptly forgot why I wanted it.

Awe doesn't need witnesses. It prefers snacks.

Not everything wants to be archived. Some things just want to be enjoyed.

I lowered my expectations and reality became hilarious.

The mystery didn't deepen. It giggled.

I asked the universe what comes next. It shrugged beautifully.

Enlightenment keeps missing me because I'm busy laughing.

The most accurate lens I own is amusement.

Wonder World doesn't require belief. Curiosity works fine.

I stopped keeping score and the universe stopped performing.

Some days are revelations. Some days are just funny.

I don't chase meaning anymore. If it wants me, it knows where I am.

Everything becomes lighter once you stop insisting it matter.
